It's both an intimate portrait of one woman as she approaches menopause and a full-throated cultural howl about what it means to be female and forty or fifty or sixty something in America today. I was filled with recognition as I read the book's first pages and flooded with gratitude by the end. . . . A beautiful book you're going to miss after you've read the last page." (Cheryl Strayed). Don't miss this rare opportunity to read and discuss The Madwoman in the Volvo with the woman who wrote it.
